

charge of it.

DEATH FROM CONSUMPTION.—Yesterday morning at 5 o'clock Wm. Sargent Lombard, eldest son of Capt. J. E. Lombard, died at the residence of his parents, No. 189 Eleventh street. The cause of death was that dread disease, consumption. Wm. Lombard was 23 years of age and came to Portland five years ago from New York. Soon after arriving here he secured employment as clerk in the billing department of the O. R. & N. Co., and remained in the company's service until he was taken sick in March. Since that time he had been under the care of physicians, and had traveled with the hope of being benefited. He was a well-known and popular member of Co. G., O. S. M., and the time of the anti-Chinese excitement last spring, when Co. G was under arms, he took a severe cold, which settled on his lungs. Up to the time of his taking cold at the armory he had always been a strong and healthy young man. He was a fine scholar, having completed his education in Germany, and being as well versed in German as in his native language.

RETURNED WITH OREGON.—All who leave O

Morning Oregonian
Portland, OR
Saturday, January 1, 1887